

Overview of the Child Support Program

An Intergovernmental Partnership Ensuring Financial Support and Parental Involvement

The Child Support Program¹ is a successful federal-state-tribal partnership that seeks to promote economic stability for children whose parents live apart. The program collects $4.37 for every $1 in public funds invested. In FY 2023, $31 billion was collected in 12 million cases for 12.7 million children.²

The Child Support Program works to ensure that children in single-parent households receive a reliable source of private financial and medical support. The program increases family self-sufficiency, reduces child poverty, and encourages both parents to be involved and committed to their children. Only the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) and Medicaid reach more children. While one of the core missions of the child support program is to collect financial support for the children, the program does much more.

The Child Support Program's core functions include:

- Establishing parentage;
- Establishing, modifying, and enforcing child support and medical support orders; and
- Collecting and distributing support.

Child Support staff use a variety of methods and tools to carry out these core functions to support children and their families. Using administrative and judicial processes, child support staff locate employers and other income payors, and work with them to withhold a portion of income paid to parents owing support. In FY 2023, more than 70% of collections came from withheld wages.³

While income withholding is the primary collection tool, Child Support staff may utilize other remedies to pursue support for children including:

- Withholding a portion of unemployment insurance benefits
- Offsetting federal and state income tax refunds
- Suspending driver, professional, occupational, and recreational licenses
- Seizing bank accounts
- Placing liens on real and personal property
- Denying a US Passport
- A court action for indirect civil contempt of court; and
- A court action to determine the arrearage amount and a monthly payment plan.

States also collaborate with each other to ensure that parents living in a state different from their children meet their obligations.

Child Support Supplements and Reduces Custodial Families' Need for Public Benefits

In 2015, over three-quarters of custodial parents served by the child support program lived in households that received some form of public assistance. In that year, 73% of households served by the child support program received Medicaid; 45% received SNAP; 15% received housing subsidies; 9% received Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) and 9% received Supplemental Security Income (SSI).⁴

Child support represents a substantial portion of income for lower income parents. Among custodial parents below poverty who received full payments, the mean annual child support received in 2017 ($5,581) represented 57.1% of their mean personal income.⁵ Child support helps families avoid the use of public benefit programs, supplements benefits while the family is receiving assistance, and supports their transition off assistance.

The Child Support Program Does More than Collect Dollars

Local child support staff work with parents who owe child support to assist them in obtaining and maintaining work and modifying support orders when permissible so that they do not fall behind in payments. Child Support staff try to build a culture of compliance, so that parents support their children voluntarily and reliably. Child Support Programs connect with community partners to provide additional resources to parents in their caseloads, when appropriate, such as employment programs, access and visitation services, and fatherhood programs.

Child Support Programs promote stable, safe, and healthy relationships between parents and children by participating in local community efforts to strengthen families and encourage responsible parenthood. Child Support Programs safeguard addresses for custodial parents who experience family violence. Local child support offices partner with domestic violence community programs to refer custodial parent victims for services.

Child Support Programs have developed targeted initiatives to work with parents in special circumstances who have barriers to meeting their child support obligations. This includes veterans, incarcerated parents, and the re-entry population.

The National Child Support Engagement Association (NCSEA) Supports Continued Improvements to the Child Support Program

NCSEA provides information about child support issues and successes to congressional members and provides input to the federal Office of Child Support Services \(OCSS\). In the last two years, NCSEA has provided detailed feedback to OCSE on proposed rulemaking and their strategic plan.

Annually, NCSEA hosts a Child Support Policy Forum where child support leaders from across the country share with state, private, tribal, and federal partners the various policy improvements and challenges to implementing and improving the program.

NCSEA is preparing additional proposals to improve the Child Support Program.⁶ They include:

- Increasing collaboration between the Child Support Program and Workforce Innovation and Opportunity Act programs;
- Amending existing law to allow 66% federal match dollars to be spent by IV-D child support programs on employment services for parents owing support, including case management, enhanced child support services, employment training, subsidized employment, and transportation costs associated with employment services;
- Improving the administrative tools and authority to adjust support orders based on the parent's ability to pay;
- Improving enforcement tools to identify assets and encourage parents to support their children;
- Establishing parenting time orders as an allowable activity for federal financial participation so that unwed parents receiving a support order are also given parenting time privileges;
- Improving collaboration between the Child Support Program and the Child Welfare Program; and
- Amending provisions of the Internal Revenue Code and provisions of Title IV-D of the Social Security Act to authorize tribal child support programs to have access to federal tax information, modernize disclosure provisions of the Internal Revenue Code to allow all elements of the federal tax information to be shared with contractors of state, local and tribal child support programs, and reaffirm that all federal tax information that is shared with the child support program and their contractors remain confidential.
